“This is learning + engagement + excitement and that = success.”

Sharon Nowling Perry says the Lumens DC160 allows for whole group interaction. If she is teaching a lesson from the textbook, students are engaged with their own material. But with the Lumens visual presenter, “I can project directly from the text in real time what the concept is that the students are practicing.”

She says the visualizer is also excellent for conducting peer teaching. “Students are encouraged to come to the board and demonstrate used to solve mathe problems,” shesays. “By projecting an image onto a dry erase board; students are able to work directly on the board.” Projecting the book image, she says, saves copies and time.

Additionally, students can display their own work and use it as a teaching document. “The whole experience excites them to see other’s work on ‘The Big Screen’. This is learning+ engagement + excitement and that = success. The Lumens visual presenter allows me to teach withouthaving to be a drill-master. I am able to be a facilitator to their learning and discovering.” ■
